Hawa® Viric, from Life Natura, aims to counteract viral activity in the upper respiratory system, in particular the etiological process.

DESCRIPTION

Hawa Viric to strengthen the respiratory system

The hawa®viric formulation aims to counteract viral activity in the upper respiratory system in order to prevent and eliminate not only the related symptoms, but also and above all the etiological process. Rather than relying on the isolated action of a plant, hawa®viric combines the antiviral and immunomodulatory activities of several ingredients, whose actions are necessary to counteract the activity of the main pathogens, as well as to mitigate other comorbidities.

Herbal supplements have long been used to treat and prevent viral respiratory infections. Bioactive natural compounds usually have good biocompatibility, bioavailability and lower toxicity. The advantage of herbal medicines is that they have immunostimulating and inflammation-modulating effects, meaning they can help prevent an exaggerated immune reaction, helping the immune system to better cope with the infection.

Respiratory viruses affect people of all ages and are a leading cause of morbidity and mortality worldwide.

Viruses are abundant, ubiquitous, and play an important role in the health of people, animals, and plants.

Viral infection is not synonymous with disease, since many viral infections are subclinical (asymptomatic, inapparent), while others give rise to diseases of varying severity that are usually accompanied by characteristic clinical signs.

The most common viral infections are respiratory infections: infections of the nose, throat, upper respiratory tract, and lungs, which include symptoms such as sore throat, sinusitis, and the common cold. Other viral respiratory infections include influenza, pneumonia, and coronavirus.

Respiratory infections are more likely to cause severe symptoms in children, the elderly, immunosuppressed patients, and/or those with lung or heart disease.
