Nutramedix makes high quality herbal supplements. The art and science of herbal formulation is as old as herbalism itself, but little was known about how Samento worked in combination with other herbs.

DESCRIPTION

The evolution of NutraMedix and the central role of Samento

Often, the core of an herbal supplement company is defined by a specific plant, closely tied to its origins and the vision of its founders. For NutraMedix, this plant has become an essential element for its growth, as well as to improve the health and well-being of its clients. The plant that has been key in this process is known locally as Samento (Uncaria tomentosa), and has been fundamental in the forging of its history.

The initial launch of NutraMedix with Uncaria tomentosa (Cat's Claw)

NutraMedix's entry into the US market began with the introduction of small quantities of Uncaria tomentosa, known as Cat's Claw. This move marked their foray into the then-new field of natural supplements. During this process, they crossed paths with Phillip Steinberg in Wisconsin. Steinberg, who was a certified nutritionist, was dedicated to grinding the bark of this plant to turn it into a powder suitable for encapsulation. Using it himself, he was so amazed by its effects that he decided to write several articles and a book titled "Cat's Claw: Uncaria tomentosa, the miraculous herb of the Peruvian jungle?", highlighting its properties.

Later studies revealed that the majority of cat's claw contained pentacyclic oxindolic alkaloids (TOAs), which inhibited many of the plant's immunological benefits. However, the TOA-free variety of cat's claw was found to offer a different effect, effectively supporting immune health without overstimulating it.

It was at this point that NutraMedix realized the potential of its cat's claw in terms of funding for its numerous humanitarian aid projects. Despite potential disappointment among its wholesale customers, NutraMedix decided to market its Cat's Claw exclusively to individual consumers and medical professionals.

NutraMedix's current Samento products, presented in liquid form, differ from the capsules that were previously marketed. Although the main ingredient remains unchanged, NutraMedix's patented extraction method has resulted in a higher potency herbal supplement. This advance has been supported by research carried out in universities in different countries.
