How is human papillomavirus transmitted?

The human papillomavirus is transmitted sexually.

What treatment is there for human papillomavirus?

THE best treatment for human papillomavirus is to strengthen the immune system and during the first six months after diagnosis to have sexual relations with a condom, the body normally eliminates it.

Can you get human papillomavirus again?

You can have human papillomavirus but it would be a different genotype.

Am I going to have cancer?

Only several genotypes cause cancer, mainly in the cervix or anorectal area. HPV causes 99.9% of cervical cancer cases. It also causes cancer of the anus, head and neck (oropharyngeal cavity). But high-risk oncological viruses are much fewer than low-risk viruses and, therefore, less frequent. Specifically, the most studied are types 16 and 18.

How can human papillomavirus be prevented?

The human papillomavirus can be prevented with the use of condoms and through vaccines, administered before the first sexual intercourse.

Dr. Montiel tells us that the stimulation and reinforcement of the activity of the immune system is crucial to detect the infection, keep it asymptomatic and even eliminate the virus. "As in other viral infections, as happens with HPV, if the body's defenses are weak, these viruses escape the immune control mechanisms and diseases appear."

PAPILOXYL is a patented next-generation food supplement, the result of several years of research and development. Its recognized nutritional components make it a powerful adjuvant of the immune system, normal DNA synthesis and the protection of cells against oxidative damage.
