DESCRIPTION

L-Arginine is an essential amino acid in stressful situations and a precursor to the formation of nitric oxide: it helps to induce relaxation of blood vessels and intervenes in the processes of nitrogen transport, storage and excretion.

There are several scientific studies that explain the benefits of L-Arginine supplementation. Among them, it is highlighted that its intake helps improve wound healing by promoting cell replication and immune response. and that, associated with a weight training program, its oral administration enhances the exercise stimuli at the level of skeletal muscles, providing greater strength and muscle mass.

Others claim that this substance stimulates the secretion of growth hormone from the pituitary gland; that it is one of the precursors of creatine; and that it is essential for the production of urea (necessary for the elimination of toxic ammonia from the body).
